Light pollution: a specific problem with multiple repercussions

Light pollution has become an important strategic issue for all professionals and administrators who work with light in our cities. The debate goes far beyond the mere fact of astronomers being able to see the sky or the life of animals in the cities. Other questions concern the health and comfort of city inhabitants, life-cycle rhythms, perception according to age and the seasons.

LUCI (Lighting Urban Community International) invites you to come and discover these hidden facets of lighting in the cities by listening to and debating with: Cyril Chain, CERTU; Bruno Guiderdoni, Director of the Astronomical Observatory of Saint Genis Laval (France); Isabelle Corten, Responsible for the Light Cell of the Brussels Capital Region (Belgium); and Samuel Challeat, Research Scientist at the University of Bourgogne (Dijon, France). The debate will be led by Jean Mochon (from La Belle Idée consulting agency, specialized in innovation, France).
